

Gradually the person can begin to lose the ability to do everyday tasks. Eventually, they may not be able to do even basic tasks like eating, dressing and going to the toilet.

Their personality may change but the person is still there beneath the illness.

People can live with dementia for many years - with changing needs.

Looking after someone with dementia can be very demanding, stressful and exhausting.

You can give support by offering practical help, eg with shopping, or simply by taking the time for a friendly chat.

There are services in East Dunbartonshire for people with dementia and their carers, including support groups. Call us for more information at any of the numbers listed on the front of this leaflet.

Dementia Network

Working Together for People with Dementia in East Dunbartonshire

Communicating with someone who has dementia:

12 Helpful Hints

There are about 86,000 people with dementia in Scotland today. It will probably touch all of our lives at some point.

You may be able to reduce your risk of developing dementia in later life by:

- + eating healthily
- + staying mentally active
- + keeping physically active
- + maintaining your social networks

For more copies call Ceartas on 0141 775 0433

Compiled on behalf of the East Dunbartonshire Dementia Network March 2013

© 2008-2012, Good Morning Project Ltd, Nicky Thomson

There are a number of organisations which support people with dementia and their carers in East Dunbartonshire.

Useful Telephone Numbers

The Woodlands Centre: 0141 232 7300

Social Work: 0141 355 2200

Ceartas Advocacy: 0141 775 0433

Alzheimer Scotland: 0141 946 0966

(24 hour helpline: 0808 808 3000)

Carers Link: 0141 955 2131

Dementia is an illness of the brain. When someone has dementia, brain cells are damaged and die faster than normal. The brain doesn't work as well as it should.

Often the illness affects memory first. The person may become confused about where they are, what day it is and who people are.

Someone with dementia will often repeat actions and questions.

What can someone with dementia feel?

Imagine if you were to lose the ability to say the right word or understand what was being said, eg when on holiday in a foreign country where you don't speak the language.

You may feel frustrated, angry and look for help, perhaps someone to interpret for you.

You might respond by not speaking at all and withdrawing into yourself or avoiding situations where you have to communicate with people.

12 hints to help you communicate with someone with dementia:

- Be calm and patient.
- Face the person, speak clearly and slowly.
- Make sure that you have their attention by gently touching their arm (if appropriate) and saying their name.
- Use short, simple sentences and say exactly what you mean.
- Try to get one idea across at a time.
- Allow plenty of time for the person to take in what you say and to reply.
- Try not to confuse or embarrass the person by correcting them bluntly.
- Use questions which ask for a simple answer.
- Don't ask questions which test their memory, eg 'who am I?' or 'what did you do yesterday?'
- Talk about familiar people, places and ideas.
- Use the names of the people you are talking about instead of 'he' or 'she'. It will remind the person of who you are talking about.
- Use facial expressions and hand gestures to make yourself understood.

A person with dementia may also:

- feel under pressure because they can't cope as well as they used to.
- feel that their independence and privacy are being taken away.
- think that they are being judged for making a mistake.
- be frightened by too much noise, too many people or a change to their routine.
- may already have poor hearing and eyesight which can be made worse by their dementia.

Actions speak louder than words!

A smile, touch or gesture can be just as important in getting the message across and showing that you care.

Sometimes holding the person's hand when you talk can be very reassuring.